Bachelor's degree Literature French Language, Modern Literature and Humanities

UFR de Lettres, Arts, Création, Technologies (LACT)

Bachelor's degree L2 L3

TO GET THERE

Students can be admitted to L2 after completing L1 in French Language, Literature and Humanities or a year of preparatory class in literature. Students can be admitted to L2 after completing a high school diploma plus another diploma equivalent to one year of higher education (subject to deliberation by the selection committee).

Students can be admitted to L3 after completing L2 in French Language, Literature and Humanities or two years of preparatory class in literature. Students can be admitted to L3 after completing a high school diploma plus another diploma equivalent to two years of higher education (subject to deliberation by the selection committee).

Expected skills and knowledge: good level of written and oral expression in French, literary knowledge, creativity, curiosity and open-mindedness.

ACQUIRED SKILLS

Proficiency in written and oral French; excellent literary knowledge; ability to analyse literary texts and understand them in their historical context, from the Middle Ages to modern times; written and oral communication in a foreign language (English); good level in Latin; creativity; creation of career plan; introduction to the challenges of university research in French language, literature and humanities.

YOUR FUTURE CAREER

Students from the French Language, Literature and Humanities programme can pursue a career in teaching (middle and high school), research, books, publishing, information, communication, and the public service. Degrees in French language, literature and humanities are increasingly sought-after by companies. Following the Licence degree, the majority of students pursue their studies at Master's level to become specialised. At our university, the following courses are offered:

- Master's in Careers in Teaching, Education and Training, Secondary (preparation for the CAPES exam)
- Master's in Literature, Knowledge and Digital Culture
- Master's in Print and Digital Publishing

BENEFITS OF THE PROGRAM

The course provides students with the methodological foundations of the discipline (conceptual and textual analysis through essay and commentary exercises, oral presentations on summary questions, etc.). It is designed to provide students with in-depth knowledge of French language, literature and humanities; proficiency in at least one foreign language; and the ability to work autonomously with proficiency in bibliographic and computer tools. The course features: · an introduction to humanities disciplines (history, philosophy), which opens up gateways to other courses; · intensive classes in modern language and Latin; strong emphasis placed on creative writing practices in learning; · a high level of support for students, who are supervised by an appointed tutor throughout their course; · reflection around the connection between literary studies and the professional world; · a high level of coordination between units in French literature, comparative literature and linguistics.
