- Integration into Youth and Sports structures
- Integration into sport-related associations in management positions (federations, sports clubs, etc.)
- Integration into private companies (sport-related)

BENEFITS OF THE PROGRAM

The Master's degree in Sport and Social Sciences is a research Master's in the social sciences, providing in-depth knowledge (sociological and historical) in the social dimensions and major contemporary issues of the phenomenon of sport. Students have a research major (classes, dissertation, group work, work placements in the laboratory's research projects) and a minor that depends on their career plans, through an introductory unit focusing either on management or on health and adapted physical activities. Each pathway is individually designed according to the student's career objectives, and work placements are chosen accordingly. Another special feature of the Master's programme is the work-study programme in M2 in a variety of sports organisations, with assignments relating to research, auditing, quantitative and qualitative studies or projects relating to the major issues facing contemporary sport. Each year, a major project based on a sporting phenomenon involves the various courses and professionals. For more information, see the component's website: <https://staps.univ-gustave-eiffel.fr/>
